“Schrödinger's Performance”

Miyazaki Prefecture CIR
Graham Marsh

Hi everyone! I hope you're all keeping well. I thought it might be interesting to go with something a little different as the theme for this month's column - quantum physics! (I know that the terms "quantum physics" and "interesting" are not often mentioned in the same sentence without some kind of negative clause, but bear with me!) I'm sure you've all heard of Erwin Schrödinger's famous thought experiment involving a cat, used to poke fun at the Copenhagen interpretation of quantum physics - in short, the outcome of something exists in all possible states until it is observed. Initially, it was proposed simply to create a paradox the prevalent theory couldn't resolve, but the concept throws up a lot of interesting thoughts and implications.

With all that in mind, the reason I bring it up is that, at the time of writing, I'm just about to try something I've never done before - performing live online using Zoom. Naturally, I'm also a little nervous about how it will go - as we've just seen, it must therefore exist simultaneously as an amazing success, a crushing failure and everything in between and outside those possibilities until I actually experience it and find out firsthand.

Of course, as we all know, the biggest draw here is that, whatever the result, finding out is half the fun!

One other amusing twist is that the performance is actually scheduled to take place in between me writing this column and Plaza News being published, which makes this a kind of miniature time capsule - as you read this, the result is already known! As such, if there's an old man in the corner nearby drowning his sorrows with cup ramen and kinakobō, don't worry - he'll be alright just as soon as he remembers that the fun of finding out is stronger than the disappointment of something not going well.

The moral of this rambling monologue, dear readers, is simple - not knowing how something will go is not a valid reason to not do it. Since April's a popular time to try or start something new, open the box and give it a go! It could go well! And if you happened to catch my performance, thanks for watching and my apologies if it didn't go well!
